1. Title

Collections development policy

2. Introduction

The National Museum of Australia (the Museum) is a major cultural institution charged with researching, collecting, preserving and exhibiting historical material of the Australian nation. The Museum is established under the National Museum of Australian Act 1980, which along with the National Museum of Australian Regulations 2019, defines the Museum's role, functions and powers.

3. Scope

3.1 Description

The Museum's collections consist of objects and associated materials the Commonwealth Government transferred to the Museum following its establishment in 1980, and objects and associated materials acquired by the Museum through donation, transfer or purchase since 1980.

3.2 Purpose

This policy describes the rationale, definitions, collecting principles and structure of the Museum's collections. It establishes the intellectual and administrative principles that support and govern the collection of historical material by the Museum.

3.3 Rationale

The Museum documents and celebrates the distinctive character and history of the nation. Collections are central to this role. One of the functions of the Museum, as set out in the National Museum of Australia Act 1980 (NMA Act) is to develop and maintain a national collection of historical material. The NMA Act also requires the Museum to have a dedicated gallery, and collection of historical material, relating to First Nations peoples.

The NMA Act empowers the Museum to do all things necessary to undertake this task, including the purchase, acceptance by gift, deposit or loan of historical material or acceptance of transfer of assets from other Commonwealth Government agencies. It also empowers the Museum to collect and make available information relating to Australian history.

The Museum builds collections that are nationally significant, in line with its legislative responsibilities. It seeks objects, documents, images and other materials that have rich historical associations and communicative power and that represent the thematic and geographic breadth of Australia's history. Collection materials gain emblematic or iconic value through their connection with key figures, events, places, organisations or themes in the national past. Hence the Museum's collecting is necessarily selective and representative, rather than comprehensive.

4. Principles and guidelines

4.1 Core collecting areas and priorities

The Museum balances its collecting activities between long-term obligations to document and represent the nation's history and society and the shorter-term needs associated with exhibitions.

The following three interrelated and overlapping thematic areas guide the Museum's range of operations, including collection development, exhibitions, public programs and publications:

- First Nations histories and cultures
- Australian history and society since 1788
- People's interaction with the environment.

These entwined thematic areas assist in explaining the broader history of human interaction with the Australian continent, of both First Nations and non-First Nations peoples. Objects considered for inclusion in the Museum's collections are often significant in more than one thematic area and represent a range of historical experiences.

A separate Collections development framework describes these core collecting areas, and a Collection development strategy guides current collection priorities in greater detail. The scope and orientation of the collecting areas and priorities is periodically reviewed.

4.2 Ethics and collecting practices

Museum staff will abide by the International Council of Museums (ICOM) code of ethics and the Australian Museums and Galleries Association (AMAGA) National Standards for Australian Museums and Galleries regarding collecting practices and procedures.

The Museum is committed to making information about its collections, and the process by which it acquires material for its collections, available to the public.

The Museum will only acquire material for its collections in accordance with relevant Australian legislation, such as the Historic Shipwrecks Act 1976 (Cth) and the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Heritage Protection Act 1984 (Cth) as well as Australia's international obligations, such as those under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES Convention) and the UNESCO Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property 1970 (1970 UNESCO Convention). The obligations set out in these international instruments have been given effect in Australian law through the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 (Cth), and the Protection of Movable Cultural Heritage Act 1986 (Cth), respectively.

When acquiring material for its collections, Museum staff will be guided by all relevant Museum policies and procedures relating to any physical or psychosocial hazards that may be inherent in an object or may arise through its collection and handling.

When acquiring First Nations objects for the Museum's collections, Museum staff will be guided by the principles set out in the Museum's First Nations Cultural Rights and Engagement policy.

Museum staff will consult and collaborate with relevant traditional owners or authorised representatives, as appropriate.

The Museum also recognises the principles of the Australian Museums and Galleries Association document, First Peoples: A Roadmap for Enhancing Indigenous Engagement in Museums and Galleries, and will follow, where appropriate, the principles and philosophy of the Indigenous Australian Art Charter of Principles for Publicly Funded Collecting Institutions and Creative Australia's Protocols for using First Nations Cultural and Intellectual Property in the Arts. The Museum recognises Australia's commitment to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP), particularly article 13 which relates to the rights to culture, histories and heritage and its many expressions.

As outlined in the Museum's Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Ancestral Human Remains management and repatriation policy, Non-Australian Indigenous human remains policy and Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander secret/sacred, sensitive and private material policy, the Museum will not actively collect and retain First Nations human remains or secret/sacred First Nations material.

The Museum will not acquire material for its collections on a conditional basis, such as the condition that the material be displayed in perpetuity. The Museum will not accept material on long-term loan without considering the immediate and future implications.

The Museum will collect and interpret material that may be represented in the collections of other institutions where such material has historical value relevant to the Museum's legislative functions and responsibilities.

The Museum will respect the moral rights of the creators of works acquired for the collections by ensuring the integrity of use and proper attribution of those works.

For donated material, the Museum will ensure that donors understand which collection their material is being placed in, and the associated implications for storage and preservation.

Where possible and appropriate, the Museum will inform and acknowledge donors when their material is used in Museum programs, such as exhibitions and publications.

The Museum will address any claims on material in its collections in a professional, sensitive and timely manner, guided by the Museum's Collections – return of cultural objects policy, the Museum's Complaints and feedback handling procedures and the Australian Best Practice Guide to Collecting Cultural Material.

4.3 Due diligence

The Museum will exercise due diligence before acquiring material, including undertaking extensive research of the item's provenance, as set out in the Australian Best Practice Guide to Collecting Cultural Material.

The Museum will thoroughly evaluate and act on any new information that raises questions about the provenance or authenticity of previously acquired objects. The Museum will pay particular attention to provenance information associated with periods of conflict.

The Museum will not seek to acquire for its collections, whether by purchase, gift, bequest or exchange, any material unless satisfied that it can acquire valid title to the material in question and understands the history and provenance of that material.

The Museum will not acquire any material unless it is satisfied that it has not been acquired in, or exported from, its country of origin (or any intermediate country in which it may have been legally owned) in violation of that country's law.

The Museum will not acquire archaeological antiquities where there is any suspicion that the circumstances of the recovery of the item involved a failure to follow appropriate legal procedures, such as reporting finds to the appropriate authorities.

The Museum will not acquire biological material or geological material that has been collected, sold or otherwise transferred in contravention of applicable national or international laws, regulations or treaties.

4.4 The Museum's collections

This policy concerns the Museum's holdings of historical material in the following three collections:

- National Historical Collection
- Archive Collection
- Museum Collection

4.4.1 National Historical Collection

The National Historical Collection is the Museum's core heritage collection representing Australian history and experience. It is a selective and representative collection that seeks to document the diversity and breadth of life in Australia.

Material is accepted into the National Historical Collection if it is shown to be nationally significant. This includes objects and other materials related to national institutions and organisations as well as exemplars of national, state, regional and local themes, events and interests that have national visibility and salience.

The National Historical Collection may include material of any medium, including objects, images, and audiovisual materials. It can include digital materials.

The physical, technical and intellectual integrity of material in the National Historical Collection is managed according to the highest standards set out in the Museum's Collection care and preservation policy and the Museum's Digital preservation policy.

In accordance with the NMA Act, the Museum will use every endeavour to make the most advantageous use of the National Historical Collection in the national/public interest.

Material is approved for inclusion in the National Historical Collection by the Museum's Council, on the recommendation of the Deputy Director, Collection and Curatorial.

Criteria for acceptance into the National Historical Collection

- Significance

The material has high historic, aesthetic, scientific, research, and/or social or spiritual significance that:

- relates to themes, issues or people of national scope or importance
- relates to subjects identified in the Collections development framework and/or Collection Development Strategy
- will make a lasting contribution to understanding and interpreting Australian history.

- Provenance

The origin and/or history of the material can be thoroughly documented and authenticated to the highest standards, including documenting its chain of ownership.

- Originality or rarity

The material is unique or relatively rare, or it is a fine example of its type.

- Research value

The material has high research value through its potential to contribute to research and scholarship.

- Display value

The material has high display value through its potential communicative power within an exhibition.

- Conservation qualities

The material is suitable for long-term storage and preservation. Material in digital format should meet the Museum's digital preservation and access standards.

4.4.2 Archive Collection

The Archive Collection comprises historically important documents, audio and/or visual records that support material held in the National Historical Collection and assists with its interpretation.

It may also include material containing pertinent information relevant to the Museum's areas of research activity or other program interest. The origin and/or history and prior ownership of archival material will be documented and authenticated before its acquisition.

The Museum will not seek to acquire large individual collections of archival material. Owners of such collections will be referred to specialist archival agencies or other collecting institutions.

The intellectual, technical and physical integrity of material in the Archive Collection will be managed according to the standards set out in the Museum's Collection care and preservation policy and the Museum's Digital preservation policy. However, Archival Collection material may not receive specialised conservation treatment unless it is selected for exhibition, program purposes or loan.

Material is approved for inclusion in the Archive Collection by the Deputy Director, Collection and Curatorial as a delegate of the Museum's Council.

Criteria for acceptance into the Archive Collection

- Relevance

The material has a direct association with material in the National Historical Collection or Museum Collection or supports the Museum's research or other program interests.

- Research value

The object has research value through its potential to contribute to research and scholarship.

- Conservation qualities

There are no hazards or problems involved in stabilising, storing or handling the material. Material in digital format should meet the Museum's digital preservation standards.

4.4.3 Museum Collection

The Museum Collection comprises material of historical importance, which supports the Museum's research, exhibiting and interpretive goals, but which does not meet the higher-level criteria required for inclusion in the National Historical Collection.

It might contain useful examples of forms or types of objects, but without strong use association. The Museum Collection can also include material acquired for, or related to, an exhibition program at the Museum.

The physical, technical and intellectual integrity of material in the Museum Collection will be managed according to the standards set out in the Museum's Collection care and preservation policy and the Museum's Digital preservation policy. Material may not receive specialised conservation treatment unless it is selected for exhibition, program purposes or loan.

Material in the Museum Collection will be periodically reviewed for retention in the Museum Collection, for inclusion in the National Historical Collection, or for disposal.

Material is approved for inclusion in the Museum Collection by the Deputy Director, Collection and Curatorial as the delegate of the Council of the Museum.

Criteria for acceptance into the Museum Collection

- Significance

The material has historic, aesthetic, scientific or research, and/or social or spiritual significance that:

- relates to themes, issues or people of national scope or importance
- relates to subjects identified in the Collections Development Framework or

Collection development strategy

- will make a lasting contribution to understanding and interpreting Australian history.

- Provenance

The origin and/or subsequent history of the material can be thoroughly documented and authenticated. Assessment of Museum Collection material includes documentation of its known chain of ownership.

- Originality or rarity

The material may be relatively rare; it may also include useful exemplars of a particular form or type of object, which do not have the specific provenance details necessary for inclusion in the National Historical Collection.

- Research value

The material has research value through its potential to contribute to research and scholarship.

- Display value

The material has display value through its potential communicative power within an exhibition.

- Conservation qualities

There are no hazards or problems involved in stabilising, storing or handling the material. Material in digital format should meet the Museum's digital preservation and access standards.

4.5 Legal title

The Museum will seek to obtain clear legal title for all objects acquired for its collections. This includes reaching a clear agreement with the owners of material or the transferring party about the nature of the acquisition, including the status of any associated intellectual property rights.

Where appropriate, the Museum will seek to acquire limited intellectual property rights in the material for Museum purposes.

With regard to the material culture of First Nations communities, the Museum may in appropriate circumstances hold material on behalf of traditional owners rather than seek the transfer of ownership to the Museum.

In the event that First Nations communities or their representatives seek the return or repatriation of material from any of the Museum's collections, the Museum will follow the procedures set out in its Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander secret/sacred, sensitive and private material policy.

In the event that non-First Nations communities or their representatives seek the return or repatriation of non-First Nations material from any of the Museum's collections, the Museum will follow the procedures set out in its Collections – return of cultural objects policy.

4.6 Deaccessioning and disposal of collections material

The Museum undertakes deaccessioning and disposal of material from its collections as part of its collections management strategy. Deaccessioning and disposal of material is governed by the Museum's Collection deaccessioning and disposal policy.

5. Definition of terms

Archive Collection

The Archive Collection comprises historically important documents, audio and/or visual records that are associated with material held in the National Historical Collection. It may also include similar material containing pertinent information relevant to the Museum's areas of research activity or other program interest. Material in the Archive Collection is not part of the National Historical Collection.

Acquisition

Acquisition refers to the rigorous process by which collection material is obtained by the Museum. Acquisition may be by donation (including donations processed under the Cultural Gifts Program), bequest, purchase, or transfer of assets from other Commonwealth agencies. The process by which material is acquired is documented in the Museum's acquisition procedures.

Australian history

Australian history encompasses the political, economic, social and environmental history of Australia. Material documenting Australia's history includes contemporary material.

Museum Collection

The Museum Collection comprises material of historical importance which supports the Museum's research, exhibiting and interpretive goals, but which does not meet the higher-level criteria required for inclusion in the National Historical Collection. It might contain useful examples of forms or types of objects, but without strong use association.

National Historical Collection

The National Historical Collection is defined by the National Museum of Australia Act 1980 as comprising historical material owned by or in the possession of the Museum. The National Historical Collection does not include material held in the Archive Collection or Museum Collection.

6. Definition of responsibilities

Council

The Council of the National Museum of Australia approves material for inclusion in the National Historical Collection. The Council also delegates its powers to acquire historical material (including expending funds on acquiring such material, in accordance with the Museum's financial delegations) to designated Museum staff including the Director and the Deputy Director, Collection and Curatorial.

The Director

The Director (or other official tasked with the responsibility under this policy) approves material for inclusion in the Archive and Museum Collections.
